School- days mobile apphelp

The square shaped like a QWERTY packin' Motorola Charm keyboard is an Android-powered device that T-Mobile is apparently pushing as a phone for those heading back to school. According to the leaked photo from a T-Mobile ad below, the phone will be priced at $0 while the promotion is in effect. Joining the Charm as free options for school set in T-Mobile are the messaging duo of the Samsung Gravity3 and the Gravity T. At least, you can show your teacher that you know how to choose a lot of mobile phone; that is, before removing the phone to send texts to class. No word ahead when the sale begins, but lately we report that T-Mobile is planning to offer the Charm for $74.99 after a $75 mail-in-rebate and a 2 year contract when the $0 price isn't in effect. Your child may have started school or gone back to school already, but here on the east coast (especially in New York), the school is starting! My Facebook feed is full of adorable first day school photos of family and friends. Seeing all the pictures took me back in time, Marty McFly style, to the days when all I had to worry about was what to eat for lunch and with whom to play backwards. Of all the memories of the first day of school, what I remember most is my first day of kindergarten at an elementary school in suburban Long Island. I didn't actually start kindergarten in September like all the other kids - instead, as a late transfer student from Queens, I started school in the middle of winter. What I remember most about that day was to show up at school wearing a winter coat, no backpack or school supplies. I remember the kindness of a curly, red-head girl named Randi who helped take off my jacket and hang it on the wall. Then... I remember bursting into tears. Just sitting on my grandmother's lap (Mrs Turnwall) as she comforted me as she let me cry big fat tears. Because he was shy. And I felt lost. And alone. Finally, I stopped crying and settled down to hear Mrs. Turnwall read a story to the whole class. Fortunately, the class only lasted half a day, so I didn't have to be in school for a long time. Looking back now, I think I felt very, very out of place for a few reasons: 1) I was a new student; 2) Everyone already had time to get to know one mself; 3) I don't look like anyone else (I was the only Asian student in class). I think the shock of starting a new routine and the fear of being in an uncharted environment with unknown faces was overwhelming. It was a lot for a 5-year-old to handle! Starting a new school is certainly one of the biggest changes in childhood – and I think it's definitely important parents and children to visit school beforehand and get an idea of size and design. But for relocating families who may not have time to visit the school, there are value in emphasizing the positive and fun things a child's school will still be able to enjoy (hour of history! coloring! snack time!). Some of the biggest concerns a child may have will be making new friends and liking the new teacher - so it is also important to teach (especially shy) children to try to find other children with similar interests (who may become potential playdate mates), and take time to listen and bond with the teacher. Every first day of elementary school after that first day of kindergarten must have been easier – because I don't have a solid memory of any of them! Although I never became BFFs with the red-capped Randi, I will always remember the sweet gesture she showed me, a new girl who felt lost but never really felt alone again.
